

Declaration of Principles

Whereas Nadya Suleman's fourteen children need special protection and care,

Whereas Nadya Suleman and Angels In Waiting recognize that all of her children, and particularly her octuplets, deserve the very best care to meet their medical, physical, emotional and special needs since they were born prematurely and are high risk infants;

Whereas Nadya Suleman and Angels In Waiting believe that early intervention and individualized care by trained professionals working with Nadya and her infants will promote a safe, secure, healthy and happy childhood for them;

Now therefore, Nadya Suleman and Angels In Waiting agree to the following Principles:

Principle I

The best interests of Nadya's children shall, at all times, be the paramount consideration with respect to all decisions made concerning their health, safety, and welfare.

Principle II

The children shall be given every opportunity to develop physically, mentally, emotionally, and socially in a healthy and normal manner.

Principle III

Special care and protection shall be provided so that each child shall have adequate nutrition, housing, education and medical services in an environment which is conducive to such care.

Principle IV

Any child who has special needs shall be given the appropriate treatment, education and care required by his or her particular needs.

Principle V

Each child shall be protected against all forms of abuse, neglect, or cruelty.

Principle VI

All monies donated to Angels In Waiting shall be used solely to provide professional services for the benefit of the children for so long as Nadya and Angels in Waiting are working together unless such donations are specifically designated to be used for other purposes.

Principle VII

In the event that Nadya and Angels In Waiting are no longer working together all donations that have not been utilized shall be used for the support of other high risk infants whom Angels in Waiting deem are in need of such care.

Principle VIII

Nadya and Angels in Waiting agree that the children must have the love and respect of all individuals who care for them and that the above principles will maximize their opportunity to develop as healthy, happy and productive human beings.
