Statement of Jane Doe 2

I am here today to share with you my deep frustration and loss of faith in our justice system. Nathaniel Radimak has caused harm to multiple individuals over a span of 2 decades and is now set to be released from prison after serving less than a year. I am unable to believe such a short sentence would result in any sort of behavioral reform or rehabilitation considering the length of time he has been committing crimes.

It makes me angry and disappointed to see this person, who has caused suffering and trauma, walk free while his victims are still left to deal with the aftermath of his actions. We are still fighting for compensation for our damages, but there are constant delays in that process.

It is time for our justice system to prioritize the rights and well-being of those affected by crimes. To the people in positions who have the power to make change, I ask you to please take an honest look at the flaws in our system and make the necessary changes to ensure that justice is truly served for all victims, regardless of race, gender, or social status. We deserve a system that protects and supports victims, not one that allows perpetrators to commit crimes with such little consequence.
